CLEVELAND'S TOUR.

The Ladies in Gala Dress to Welcome the President.

He Views the Fair, Makes a Speech and Holds a Reception.

Assembly of the Knights Opened at Minneapolis.

Powderly Addresses Fifteen Thousand People.

The President at St. Louis.

[illegible] Mayor Francis but to-day the control [illegible] belongs to the people. Every weather would not be resisted. The streets cleared by last night's shower are free from dust and everywhere [illegible] line of the president's ride the sidewalks are crowded to their utmost capacity. The president's carriage drawn by four [illegible] superior of horses, preceded by [illegible] and followed by five other carriages provided for the [illegible] companies and the local committee in charge reached the [illegible] Ten minutes before 10. At 10:15 the president and Mrs. Cleveland appeared at the door and were applauded by a crowd of ladies and children that had gathered in the park in front of the residence. Then was a considerable delay [illegible] Major Brownwater carried the carriage with the president and his wife and his few minutes they were moving briskly toward the fair grounds escorted by a squad of mounted police and the citizens' committee in carriages. Hundreds of vehicles crowded with people awaited on Grand avenue at the entrance of the Vandeventer place and joined the procession, which was strung out along the avenue for more than a mile. There was no noise whatever along the route except the clatter of horses' hoofs on the road and the tramp of thousands of feet, upon the [illegible] Not [illegible] and [illegible] to mar the pleasant holiday drive, and at 10:45 the party arrived at the gate of the fair grounds.

The drive to the fair grounds was made at a trot. It was "children's day," and the youngsters were out in great force. They with mothers, nurses and friends packed the seats of the amphitheatre and the surrounding promenade to the number of sixty thousand. A brass band in a pagoda in the centre attempted to make itself heard but the [illegible] voiced congregation wondered everything but the bass drum inaudible. The [illegible] and the ample [illegible] track [illegible] were [illegible] and Mrs. Cleveland was presented by the lady superintendent of the kindergarten schools with a handsome basket of flowers. The children led by bands sang "Hail, Columbia" and the carriage, after a drive through the fair grounds, made its way back to the city, where they went directly to the Merchants' exchange. Mrs. Cleveland did not accompany the president to the exchange, but was left en route at the residence of the mayor, whence she went to that of Mrs. Scanlon, one of society leaders, where the ladies will have opportunity to pay their respects.

On arriving at the Merchants' exchange the president was taken to the directors' room, where a large number of representative citizens from the city at large were introduced to him by counties. When this ceremony was over the party was escorted to the main hall of the exchange.

The hall, which is 225 feet long and 150 wide, was crowded to its utmost capacity with people and the president had difficulty in getting from the reception room to the platform. On the first appearance of the president cheers went up from the multitude and as he ascended the platform the enthusiasm was intense. Frank Gaiennie, president of the Merchants' exchange, introduced Mayor Francis and declared it the most important day of St. Louis's history. Mayor Francis then welcomed the president to the city and state, and after another explosion of cheers the president responded as follows:

If I am expected to make an extended speech on this occasion I am afraid I shall disappoint, and this I should be sorry to do, after having succeeded at last through much tribulation in securing face to face with myself Louis the [illegible]. The tribulation of which I speak has arisen from the extreme kindness of a vast number of American people and the cordial invitations they have tendered me to stop and see them on my way to you. Your city was the objective point of my travel in this direction, but it has sometimes seemed to me that every town between Washington and there has been [illegible] seated as lying directly on my road, and it has been hard to combine these kind and courteous citizens that it would not be entirely easy within the time at my disposal to visit them. My own inclination is always one in the direction of their desires, it has been a [illegible] matter to resist their importunities, but I have made up my mind [illegible] people of St. Louis are to blame for the entire perplexity and disappointment which this visit has caused, for it was through them that I was induced to [illegible] at all.

I expect that anything I might say concerning your state or city in the way of [illegible] or congratulations would hardly equal your own estimate of these subjects. I believe there was a time when St. Louis was of more [illegible] than Chicago. I don't know whether this condition continues or not but I hope it does. While you can look to expect lookers on to take sides in such contests we are interested to the extent that such a struggle adds to the growth and [illegible] improvement of the country at large. Both of these ends accomplish in a wonderful degree how completely and speedily American energy and business ingenuity utilize every available element of municipal growth and how every useful type of the world's population is assimilated. [illegible] from the [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The News thinks that George William Curtis has the situation exactly when he says that "the Massachusetts democracy confirms what has been so long evident, that nothing more is reasonably expected from the democratic party. We are glad that the News and Mr. Curtis agree so well. The democratic party, however, is still good on promises.

We published on Sunday morning a summary of the agricultural and stock statistics for 1886, as gathered by the county assessor. While the year was not a particularly bright one for either our farmers or stockmen, yet the exhibit presents in a very favorable light the possibilities of production in this county. The statement gives the range of our products and the production per acre. [illegible] ease. Our Sunday edition containing the article is nearly exhausted and we shall print a large number of extra weeklies to meet the large demand.

The Salt Lake Tribune says: "Congress has the purchase of government bonds at a premium by the treasury [illegible]. That neither Cleveland nor the democratic party will have redeemed a solemn pledge or performed a promised reform if the flow of nearly $100,000,000 a year of unneeded money taken from the people is checked by revenue reform. The Republican party cannot afford to go before the country until it provides some way to relieve the people of this unjustified burden. The revenue must be reduced." If other democratic papers would take up the matter in the same way the democratic party would [illegible] for the country with a promise enough clear for the redemption of its [illegible] for the presidency.

We have received a copy of the El Paso Daily Herald, which, by special messenger, is delivered at this office each day. It is a bright, newsy sheet, and we congratulate our neighbor upon its success. The Herald is published in the interest of the Texas Pacific railroad, and is edited by Col. Thomas A. Scott, the president of the road. The paper is a credit to the enterprising city of El Paso, and we wish it success.

The people of Colorado Springs are to be congratulated upon the fact that the Rio Grande railroad has decided to make that city its headquarters. The company will erect a large depot, machine shops, etc., and will employ a large force of men. The Rio Grande road is one of the best managed roads in the country, and its selection of Colorado Springs as a headquarters is a high compliment to that city.

The Pueblo Chieftain says: "The Rio Grande railroad has decided to make Pueblo its headquarters. The company will erect a large depot, machine shops, etc., and will employ a large force of men. The Rio Grande road is one of the best managed roads in the country, and its selection of Pueblo as a headquarters is a high compliment to that city."
